Too Much Data Blurs Issues, Writer Says

with critics of U.S. policy that it any more. we aren't getting enough information about Viet-Nam and ment when you aren't going Santo Domingo. But he thinks to be able to find answers it may be because there is en- any more." tirely too much information available.

The Pulitzer Prize winning novelist said yesterday that he aws alarmed that "the most staggering events can happen now by means of a kind of drift in foreign policy.'

"There is so much information available to the huge military establishments and enormous states now that at no single point can we say 'this is a showdown.'

² "We are being overwhelmed with information. And n only in foreign policy. Ther

Robert Penn Warren agrees and no way and no time to do

"We just may pass a technological and historical mo-

The novelist made headlines last week when he joined 19 other American artists who approved poet Robert Lowell's rejection of an invitation to the June 15 White House Festival of the American Arts.

Lowell wrote President Johnson of his "dismay and distrust" of the Administration's foreign policy.

Yesterday Warren said he had not been invited to the White House festival but would have "thought seriously about accepting a bid.

Warren is in town with 2200 authors, publishers and bookis just too much to evaluat sellers for the three-day American Booksellers Association convention, which opens today at the Shoreham.

He published recently séries of interviews with leading civil rights figures called "Who Speaks for the Negro?"

The opening business session of the convention will hear Richard H. Rovere, Washington correspondent of the New Yorker. Tonight the convention will hear Arthur M. Schlesinger Jr., special assistant to President Kennedy.